To Graduates and Former Students:

You have come home and our good friends from Wittenberg are here to increase the pleasure of your return. It has been our endeavor so to arrange that this may be a real homecoming and a very pleasant occasion for you. Personally it is my first opportunity as president to extend to you my good wishes although I have known many of you, some for a longer, and others for a shorter period.

We thank you for the good cheer that you bring us, and we shall beg the privilege of leaning rather heavily upon you in the future. We want your full cooperation, and I am sure that because of your love for your Alma Mater you will freely grant us this privilege.

I know that you join with me in thanking our good friends of Wittenberg for their part in our entertainment here and will aid us in making their visit here a pleasant one. Allow me to extend to you the very best wishes of the faculty and the present student body.

Sincerely yours,
R. E. Offenhauer

This is a confession by one who has helped pick All-America teams for the last five years. And if you ever feel the urge to do likewise, we set down here a few choice bits of information as to the procedure in picking one of these mythical teams.

My belief is that All-America football teams, like death and taxes, are inevitable. There is nothing we can do to stop them. So, bearing that spirit in mind, let us proceed.

The most important thing about naming such a team is to select a good date for announcing it. If you choose late December, all the other teams will have already been picked and you will be charged with stealing your team from other sources. If you come out first with your eleven, then you will spend sleepless nights and worried days waiting for the arrival of the other "experts' selections.

There is no greater punishment for an All-America selector than to come out with a team and then discover that all the other mythical elevens are at wide variance with the one he picked. He immediately becomes a radical, a scab laborer, a double-crosser, and a chiseler.

Once you have decided upon a date, the work starts. The first important move is to comb the list of major colleges. Your thoughts will run something like this:

"Hm, Fordham. Now they have a swell publicity director up there. I must remember to put one of their boys on the team.

"Lemme see; oh, yes, St. Mary's. That 'Slip' Madigan is a swell guy. Never will forget that party he threw here in New York the last time the team was here. Gotta get that end of his on the lineup; otherwise he'll be sore."

Reckoning along those lines, you will find you have at least 23 players who are "must" propositions. They are listed on a sheet of paper under such headings as "ends," "tackles," "guards," etc.

Step Number 2 is to take all the Sunday papers during the season and read the headlines. Every time a player makes an eight-column banner he gets ten votes. Two column mention is worth seven points. Sub-head mention is worth five points, and so on down the line. These players also are placed on your list which, by now, has reached the staggering total of 53.

The third and last step in this process of elimination is most important. You must not go to any football games during the season because that would make you biased. Instead, each week you stand outside Yankee Stadium, Franklin Field, Kezar Stadium, Palmer Stadium, etc., and wait for the crowd to come out. You must count the colors of each spectator. Thus, if 1,234 persons wear Yale Bulldogs and 2,356 wear the crimson of Harvard, the vote goes to the latter. In that case, you get Harvard's roster, and select every thirteenth player on it for the All-America team. That process, by the end of the season, brings your total to the backbreaking sum of 128.

You now are ready to proceed with the selection of the team. From this group of 128 players you must select 11 worthy of All-America honors. The safest bet is to pick the best man from Yale first, because the Elis always have to be represented on the grounds that they started this whole thing anyway.

From the undefeated, or team with the best seasonal record, you must pick two players—the union rules call for this. You also take a "sleeper"—a player from some unknown college such as Upsala Teachers or Kalamazoo School of Ballooning. That makes the public think you are a real expert in segregating the wheat from the chaff. From your own alma mater must come one player, otherwise you will be charged with disloyalty to the school. That makes five down and six to go. In your mass of newspaper clippings will be many statements by coaches that "this Jones boy is a cinch for All-America." Give your baby a can of alphabet soup. Let him (or her) pick out one letter. Then go down the list of these quotations and pick out a player whose middle name begins with that letter. Presto—five to go.

For your backfield you must name a player who paralyzed the nation each week with his witty sayings. He doesn't necessarily have to be a star—just so long as he can throw the gags around. The eighth player must be one whose name is unpronounceable—otherwise it wouldn't be an All-America team. The other four are picked at random. Type all the remaining names on small sheets of paper, throw them in a hat, go to a cemetery at midnight and have a one-eyed Negro preacher pick out four slips. That makes eleven and you have an All-America football team.

The second and third teams I will leave to your own imagination. They aren't important. The main reason for the second team is to act as sort of a backstop; in case you forgot to put a friend on the first team you can always point to the fact that he was a runner-up anyway. The third team is used to handle the overflow and what you have left always can go under the heading of honorable mention. That will just about include all the players in the land and everyone will be happy.

ALUMNI - WE PRESENT OUR STADIUM

Today as the Homecoming crowd witnesses a game between Wittenberg and Bowling Green, they do so from a point of vantage in a beautiful new concrete stadium which became the property of the State this fall at no cost to Ohio.

Constructed as a PWA project, it cost $44,300. Of this amount the federal government supplied a grant of $18,000 and the balance was provided by local funds saved through the efficient economy of Dr. H. B. Williams, while he was president of the institution.

It is 300 feet long, 17 tiers high and has 3,148 seats. Underneath are rest rooms for women and men, store rooms for equipment and a concession stand.

For the convenience of the press and scouts from other schools a spacious pressbox, glass enclosed, crowns the structure. At the east end of the pressbox is a small room to be used for microphones for public address systems. It has been providing an excellent place from which to take moving picture of the games to date.

Adding to the decorative effect are touches of orange and brown glazed tile at various places around the stadium. At each game the colors of the institutions listed on Bowling Green's football schedule are flown from masts at the top of the stand.

An item of interest is the communication system from the pressbox to the players bench, enabling a member of the coaching staff to observe the developments of the game from above and communicate the information to the coach on the bench below. At the present time the communication lines extend only to the home bench but next year additional equipment will be provided to allow the opposing team a similar opportunity.

Bowling Green can well be proud of one of the finest stadiums in the Ohio Conference.

"HOLD THAT TIGER!"

Did you know that 21 football teams answer to the nickname of "Bulldogs"?

Or that 22 of them will come a-running if you yell "Tigers!"—not including the species known as Golden Tigers, Black Tigers, or Spotted Tigers.

We always had known the Yales were the "Bulldogs" and that the Georgias picked up the name after the Elis introduced football in a big way to them down there. But we were amazed—and you probably are, too—to learn that 19 other teams have the same nickname.

Investigation of the list of college nicknames shows a variety that includes practically all of the animal and bird kingdom, names lifted from ancient history, from trades and professions and—well, name your division and one can be found.

The Tigers head the animal kingdom with 22 colleges adopting them as mascots. The Bulldogs run a close second with 21, while the Wildcats hold down the show position with 14.

The Bears boast the greatest variety. Seven colleges have taken them for nicknames. Then there are the Golden Bears of California; the Polar Bears of Bowdoin and Ohio Northern; the Bruins of U. C. L. A.; the Grizzlies of Montana; Brown University's Brown Bears; and Maine's Black Bears.

The Panthers represent nine colleges, foremost of which is Pittsburgh. The dog kingdom, in addition to the bulldog, boasts two representatives in the greyhound division and three in the terrier class.

The violence of nature has resulted in a flock of colorful names. Two schools are known as the Cyclones, one as the Hurricanes and a third the Tornadoes. To complete the list, we have the Golden Tornadoes, the Purple Hurricanes, the Golden Hurricanes, and Crimson Tornadoes.

Even the waters of the ocean have been drawn upon in this search for nicknames, producing the Crimson Tide of Alabama and the Green Wave of Tulane.

The insects are represented by nine yellow jackets and one wasp, while Oklahoma City University drew on Edgar Allan Poe's immortal piece of literature and adopted the name of "Goldbugs."

There is also a trio of "devil" teams—the blue species of Duke and Beloit and the more natural red ones from Dickinson. Other odd ones are the Bullets of Gettysburg, the Zippers of Akron, and the Moccasins of Chattanooga.

The bird family is very light, topped by eight teams known plainly as the Eagles and one, Niagara, of the purple variety. The Cardinals have six representatives, Blue Jays two, the Ducks one, and the Owls two.

Canisius College has a very strange nickname—the Griffins—which defied definition until a bit of research disclosed the origin. The griffin, in the natural history of the ancients, was the name of a rapacious creature with four legs, two wings and a beak, the forepart representative of an eagle and the hind part of a lion. "The Griffin" also was the name of the first commercial vessel ever to sail the waters of Lake Erie and the ship was commanded by Robert De La Salle, one of the most famous French explorers of America in the middle of the 17th century. Which brings us to another nickname, that of La Salle College which, you may have guessed right now, has adopted the name "Explorers."

The military is represented in collegiate circles by the Corporals, Commodores and Colonels. The legislative has the Senators and Presidents.

And to round out this dissertation we have the Cowboys, Warriors, Lumberjacks, Miners, Flyers, Boilermakers, Cornhuskers, and Moundbuilders.

HOPE FOR IMPROVEMENTS

Big things are in the air for the University. Officials are now attempting to secure approval of a WPA project to resod the grid-iron, enlarge the track and field facilities by extending the track and providing new drainage and building new pits, build a new baseball diamond and a number of new tennis courts and further improve the athletic plant here.

Her Singing Coach Advised A Light Smoke

Carole CAROLE LOMBARD * PREFERS LUCKIES
BECAUSE THEY'RE EASIER ON HER THROAT

"WHEN I had to sing in a recent picture," says Carole Lombard, "I considered giving up smoking. But my voice teacher said I needn't if I'd select a light smoke—Luckies.

"I soon found that even when singing and acting 12 hours a day, I can smoke as many Luckies as I like without the slightest throat irritation."

The reason Luckies are easy on Miss Lombard's throat is because the "Toasting" process takes out certain throat irritants found in all tobacco—even the finest.

And Luckies do use the finest tobacco. Sworn records show that among independent tobacco experts—auctioneers, buyers, warehousemen, etc.—Lucky Strike has twice as many exclusive smokers as have all other cigarettes combined.

In the honest judgment of those who spend their lives buying, selling and handling tobacco . . . with men who know tobacco best . . .
